Saint Gellért

Saint Gellért (Italian: San Gerardo Sagredo;) (April 23, 980 – September 24, 1046), also called Gerhard, was an Italian bishop from Venice (some claim Basque origins) who operated in the Kingdom of Hungary (specifically in Budapest). He played a major role in converting Hungary to Christianity. He was the bishop of Csanád.

A Venetian by birth, Gellért became a monk and later prior at San Giorgio Maggiore. On a pilgrimage to Jerusalem by a circuitous route, he travelled through Hungary, whose king Saint Stephen of Hungary invited him to be his son's tutor (Saint Emeric of Hungary). Not long afterwards the see of Csanád was established with Gellért as its first bishop: he pioneered against the twin problems of paganism and imperfectly converted Christians, as Willibrord and Boniface had done elsewhere.

Gellért's martyrdom took place on 24 September 1046 (his co-martyrs were bishops Bystrik and Buldus) on a hill in Budapest . On Stephen's death in 1038 there was a revolt against Christianity. At Buda Gellért was attacked by pagans, placed on a 2-wheel cart, hauled to the hilltop and rolled down the now named Gellért Hill, then as still being alive at the bottom, beaten to death, stoned, and transfixed with a lance. Other unverified tales report him as being put in a spiked barrel for rolling down. His body was thrown from the Blocksburg cliff into the river Danube.

In 1083 his relics were enshrined with those of Stephen, but in 1333 Venice obtained a share of them and translated them to the island of Murano. There he is venerated as Venice's first martyr. Feast: 24 September. Canonized in 1083 along with St. Stephen and St. Emeric, Gellért is currently one of the patron saints of Hungary.
