❖ This year marks the 60th Anniversary of the Hungarian Revolution. The influx of approximately 40,000 Hungarians in 1956 influenced society so much that it was declared a Canadian National Historic Event, and is part of Canadian heritage. To commemorate this occasion, two large-scale concerts with the title "A Bridge to the Future" are being organized by the Canadian-Hungarian Association for Music Performance: Thursday, November 17, 7:30 PM, (Trinity-Paul's United Church, Toronto), and Tuesday, November 29, 7:30 PM (Canadian Museum of History, Gatineau). The concerts will also commemorate the 135th anniversary of the birth of Béla Bartók with the performance of his Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta. Works by Kodály, Liszt and Polgár performed by Krisztina Szabó, mezzo-soprano, Daniel Warren, trumpet, Peter Cosby, cello,

Mary Kenedi, piano and a chamber orchestra led by conductor William Shookhoff. The concerts are under the sponsorship of Stefánia Szabó, Consul General of Hungary, and Bálint Ódor, Ambassador of Hungary. A Rip in the Iron Curtain: the Revolution of 1956
It lasted less than three weeks, from Oct. 23 until Nov. 10, but the Hungarian Revolution that convulsed Budapest and the rest of Hungary in late 1956 sent shock waves through eastern and central Europe that reverberated for decades. More than a few historians, in fact, cite the popular revolt as the first rip in the Cold War's Iron Curtain.

The general lineaments of the 1956 conflict are well-known: In the autumn of that year, hundreds of thousands of Hungarians, in cities and the countryside, rose up against occupying Soviet forces and, critically, against the country's brutal, homegrown secret police, the State Protection Authority. For a few heady weeks, it seemed like the insurgents might actually push the Russians out altogether. By mid-November, though, the Soviet army had regrouped and launched an all-out assault on a nation that was, nominally, both an ally and a protectorate.

Roughly 3,000 Hungarian civilians—men, women, children—were killed during those three weeks. The uprising was crushed. But the ripples of the revolt—the Prague Spring in '68, Poland's Solidarity trade union movement in the 1980s and other rebellions, large and small—were wide-ranging, and long-lasting (time.com).
